TWENTY-FIVE THOUSAND dollars have been forwarded from Irishmen in Illinois and Wisconsin to help O'Donnell in his defense against the charge of murder in killing Carey.

THERE is a hitch in the progress on the foundation of the Bartholdi statue. Work has stopped because General Stone, who probably has a right to have his way, is denied it. It will, perhaps, wait through.

DAVID C. BROWDER was United States Senator from California in 1859 and was that year killed by Judge Terry in a duel. The funeral address of Colonel E. D. Blake over his dead body was one of the finest funeral orations ever delivered.

IT IS QUITE idle to object to "transfers of real estate." Flander may not want a certain class of people to know that he has put $15,000 in a fine property, but that sort of thing has been urged upon the obdurate newspaper man without success. There seems to be no consideration for such in the situation of Flander.

GOVERNOR BUTLER is telling the young men of Massachusetts how to take care of themselves. What he chiefly says is, that when in the South he observed that young men who had been most carefully looked after and cared for at home, were the ones who knew the least how to take care of themselves. So that the remedy appears to be, not to be carefully looked after and cared for at home.

A Federal Bankrupt Law.

If the next Congress is to be exclusively a political session, that is to say, if members are to recompense the country with 3000 worth of political talk each, served in the Congressional Record, we need not expect any public business at their hands. Among measures kindly called for by all classes of people is a general bankrupt law. Much embarrassment exists for want of it in all parts of the country. It is an error to suppose that merchants can make the usual credit business, provided by many of the States, available for general purposes. We believe there have been but two general bankrupt laws in existence for 50 years. The one enacted in 1841, and the other that was lately repealed. There are many objections to a permanent law of bankruptcy for purposes of trade. Corruption is its most obvious feature; it is its availability for the purposes of trade. Corruption is its most obvious feature; it is its availability for the purposes of trade. Corruption is its most obvious feature; it is its availability for the purposes of trade.

In Louisiana the pretensions of fillings, who played a conspicuous political part in recent history, constituted a partnership of himself and a carpet-bag knight named Norton, who appropriated all bankruptcies which were passed into the hands of the latter as public administrators. His speculation is not always done by wholesale, not all estates pass into the hands of a single administrator, nor without some form of security, however small. Not is any bankrupt his, try to be found in the past of such criminal profligacy as that of carpet-bag days.

There is no time at which a universal bankrupt law is not wanted. Every year there are many failures, and they are constantly occurring and receding that precipitate the most cautious and honest merchants upon misfortune, and as there outward commercial events occur, there should be judicial process against the honest debtor, by which he may pay the other hands the trusts that are no longer rightfully his. Such a course is designed to open for him without delay the world of commercial adventure anew.

The operation of State bankrupt laws is far less satisfactory than general. Whether the Texas, or Louisiana, debtor will be discharged from the debt due the New York creditor or not will depend upon the manipulations of local courts. That Congress may construct a general bankrupt law, provisionally with a view to permanence and eventually granting against these dangers which attend the ultimate liquidation of estates, there should be no doubt. There is no limit to the forms by which the law may guard against injustice.

The Labor Question—Mills and Operatives.
MASSACHUSETTS, October 12.—The sub-committee of the United States Senate committee on education and labor, met to-day. Thomas Colver, agent, testified that his mill employed 40,000 males of cotton yarn, and turned out 55,000,000 of 60,000,000 yards of cloth at a cost of between $65,000,000 and $80,000,000. The cost of labor was about 30 per cent. of the total cost of the goods, or about $19,500,000. The amount of capital employed in the plant, building, etc., was about equal to yearly production. American operatives number about one-fifth of those employed. They are the best operatives. They are distributed in Massachusetts, and there has not been a general strike in 30 years. The principal reason why the New Hampshire mills worked longer hours than those of Massachusetts was the want of a large amount of transportation, which cost $60,000 yearly more than in the mill was in Fall River. He did not believe that American manufacturing interests could compete with foreign countries without a protective tariff. This was partly due to the cheapness of labor, coal and iron abroad.

How American Girls Kiss.
THE Maine girl, tall and ruddy, kisses as though she were taking an impression in the cheeking of her native State. The Massachusetts girl kisses in the Greek style, favored with brown braids. The New York girl goes at it like she was dabbling in a Wall Street speculation. The kiss of the New Jersey girl is fiery as the taste of apple-jack, better known as Jersey lightning. Little Delaware's girls are as soft as the padding that goes down a Maryland kiss, it is as rich and juicy as a terrapin stew. In the Old Dominion you are met with the genuine hospitality; the girls kiss as though they wanted you to say "The Ohio girl is described as possessing all the comprehensive qualities of the Ohio man—she wants all she can get and gets all she can. A Louisiana kiss is said to be like eating sugar-cane while North Carolina girls kiss like hot butter. And we may add, the kiss of a Texas girl is as soft and gentle as the mellow moonlight, and as sweet as the balmy air that sweeps over the vast flower-bedecked prairie.—Atlanta Constitution.

Never be ashamed of having loved any one. If, perchance, you have hated, then blush for it, but not for love. It does not matter at all whether the person on whom your affections fix themselves reciprocate the sentiment. Where there is no shame in loving, in itself, the fact of having given love without reward can bring none. You have only bestowed a gift, more precious than any jewel can be, upon one who did not thank you. Since there is sorrow in our self in it, it is well to struggle with the heart and keep it until asked for, but if it goes irretrievably forth, despite all effort, no need to feel like a guilty thing and long to hide it from your very self. Providence gave you that great love, and I believe that somehow it will mingle with the life of the one it loves over, and shed a perfume and lend a sweetness to it, though it never has been spoken.

Many a woman's life has shriveled away under the weight of "disappointed love," merely because her shame in it was great. The false sentiment that loathes love to scorn a natural feeling has won her heavy away, and robbed her of all hope in the presence of the future. I think it would be better if even a woman dared to say, "I loved him, but he did not love me, with the same sweet sadness with which, when years have glided away, she can utter the words, "I loved him, and he died."

The presence of Tom Ochiltree in Paris has stimulated the development of American beer-drinking in the French capital. A correspondent says: "The American has received Colonel Ochiltree with distinguished honors, and many new points have been introduced into the code since his arrival here, while additional beer has been added to others because of his expedition of the various points of beer-drinking. It is in fact an Americanism attributed to Colonel Ochiltree's presence." With such distinguished "convivials" as Tom Ochiltree and Jim Ward abroad, for as Tom Ochiltree is said to be a confirmed drinker, it is pretty certain that the continent of Europe is for a young nation. America has made a remarkable progress in the fine art of drinking.—Chicago Times.
